Welcome to The 2016 International Conference on Technology in Higher Education!

There has never been a more opportune time for educators across the globe to come together for the purpose of understanding how technology will profoundly impact higher education.

Institutions of higher learning are currently undergoing an amazing experimentation to assess the extent to which the integration of technology in education can assist with the dueling forces of growing enrollments and decreasing revenues, of lowering costs and increasing efficiencies, and of expanding curricula and shrinking space allocations.

Following Bill Gates' challenge, the faster we jump in and engage in such an experimentation, the more we learn, the 2016 International Conference on Technology in Higher Education seeks:

- To bring together faculty and administrators from around the globe to discuss how technology is shaping the destiny of higher education.
- To share solutions and best practices in the implementation of technology through a wide range of interdisciplinary approaches and perspectives.
- To engage in proactive discussion on how to deal with technological challenges.

The 2016 International Conference on Technology in Higher Education takes place in the historically rich city of Marrakech, offering the opportunity to discover Morocco's cultural mosaic. Situated at the northwestern frontier of Africa, Morocco offers a unique ecological diversity - coastal beaches, fertile plains, arid hills, snow-capped mountains, and sand dunes. Morocco also offers a unique blend of cultures - Arab and Berber, African and European, Islamic and Judaic.
